The Silly Season

Senator John J. Ingalls, of Kansas, once said, "There is no room for the Golden Rule in politics."

That statement doubtless gave many good people something of a shock. They probably looked at it as a repudiation of the principles of Christianity. But it was nothing of the kind. It was the plain statement of a plain fact. It meant simply that politics is so full of other things that the principles of this immortal rule have never been admitted into its preserves. And that is the plain, simple truth, as everyone who knows anything about the political game knows.

The Golden Rule is the personification of unselfishness. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." You don't find politicians wearing out that rule by over use, do you? Well hardly.

Imagine Theodore Roosevelt saying to President Taft: "My dear Mr. Taft, I have a good chance to win the delegates in some of the insurgent communities; but I know you desire the presidency a second time, and as I have had it twice already I shall be glad to get out of the way and give you a clear field."

Or imagine Mr. Taft saying: "My dear Mr. Roosevelt, I have eighty-three of the New York delegates; but as that is your home state I shall be glad to get out of that field in your favor. It gives me great happiness to turn over the New York delegation to you."

It is a trifle difficult to imagine anything of that kind. But now comes Senator Robert L. Owen who vociferously proclaims that progressivism, whatever that is, is built upon the doctrines enunciated by Jesus Christ; and that all the conservatives are like the men who constituted the den of thieves in the temple at Jerusalem.

Owen seems living in the silly season. His remark would have caused no surprise if it had emanated from an inmate of a home for the feeble-minded; but that it should come from a United States senator was hardly to have been expected.

It is true there have been a few great statesmen who lived on the higher ground of unselfishness and devotion to lofty principle. George Washington was one of them. Abraham Lincoln was another. But it is a little difficult to believe that the Owens, the LaFollettes, the Bryans, the Wilsons, and others of their class belong to that splendid galaxy of patriots.

Insurgency is founded on a wish for power. The moving cause for insurgent activity is a desire to be annexed to the payroll.

And no claim is made that the generality of candidates, of whatever political faith, are not impelled largely by the same motives. They are ambitious and anxious for political fame and prestige. This is not saying they are not honest, for the most of them are. But this attempt to sanctify insurgency is supremely silly.

The reason why conservatism is more attractive than insurgency to thinking men is that it is based on sound and tried principles. We know it has succeeded in the past and we have the best reasons for believing it will succeed in the future. On the other hand insurgency is founded on jealousy, hatred, distrust, and false economic doctrines. In one form or another it has been repudiated again and again. And whenever it has been tried it has failed.

Insurgency is merely a mild attack of socialism or populism or both. When Senator Owen thinks he is righteously patriotic he is merely hysterically silly. That is all.

Cleaning Cities

One of the practical fads of the day is the setting apart by cities of a special day or days for a general cleaning of cellars, streets, alleys, and vacant lots. This plan was adopted years ago in Denver and other western cities, and the custom is spreading to the cities in the east. Hartford, Connecticut, and Washington, D. C., have fallen in line and wonderful results are noted.

There is always to be found in the larger cities an almost endless supply of refuse and rubbish, of no possible use and often serving as a menace to the public health. It is just as necessary to clean yards and cellars as it is to sweep the streets and to prevent the deposit of all sorts of rubbish on vacant lots. Stables are included in the city cleaning scheme, and after the work is done thoroughly the rest becomes easy.

The disposition of mankind is to secrete and lay aside what has been discarded in the most convenient, and often the most objectionable, places. The city cleaning crusades, however, serve to bring from their hiding places tons of material that needs to be burned or otherwise destroyed. In Hartford the scope of the spring cleaning includes the homes, from cellar to garret, the back yards and the back alleys, and all "odd corners" where material subject to breeding disease is always finding its way.

Not alone from an aesthetic sense is this city cleaning project to be commended and encouraged. From a point of view having to do with the public health it is always advisable to cast out and destroy anything that is suggestive of disease.

Foolish Naval Rivalry

Germany and England are getting together on the question of building dreadnoughts. When Lord Churchill made his declaration or suggestion that if Germany would suspend the building of more naval ships then England would do the same thing, Germany, through its papers, made a protest. But a few days ago it was announced that an exchange of naval information was being made by the two countries.

The intimation was given that if the plans under way worked out to the conclusion hoped for there would be an end of the mad race to build warships. Both England and Germany are finding that the many millions of dollars set apart for the creation of greater navies would better be used in other directions.

England has served notice that so long as Germany insists upon building more dreadnoughts it will continue to match every vessel by two more. This means that England does not intend to let the German navy take the first place. In these circumstances the wise thing to do is for both countries to stop, at least for the present, the foolish rivalry in navy building.

There is one phase of human nature that is always hard to comprehend. When a man turns suddenly against a friend, for whom he has for years expressed the warmest respect and admiration, and then sets about to cry that his former friend is not to be trusted or admitted to be honest and sincere—and all without the slightest basis for such a shifting of views—it is usually discovered that the changing one is the victim of bad dreams. There are times when men who were once staunch friends have drifted apart for good and valid reasons. Some friends are often a disappointment. But when personal ambition severs a friendship on the part of one man and converts him into an unfair and an unjust enemy there is but one conclusion to be reached.

After two brothers in a little town in the state of New York had engaged in a controversy in which one charged the other with having killed a third brother a year ago, and the accused brother had "confessed," the supposed murdered man put in his appearance suddenly and settled the matter. There must be something wrong with that bunch of brothers. In the meantime the remains of somebody found in a car of cinders have not been identified. But the "murdered" man insists that he is alive and wants to join the marines. He will have something to tell them, sure.

Society women in New York trimmed Easter hats for the poor in an altruistic millinery meeting lately. This is another added to the horrors of poverty, for having no alternative, the victims of the philanthropy will have to wear the hats.

Finances and Markets

[Associated Press Dispatch]

NEW YORK, April 11.—Price movements are somewhat conflicting in today's stock market. Reading, and New York Central were decidedly strong, with even greater gains in the Canadian group, while Santa Fe, St. Paul and New Haven have manifested a declining tendency. Canadian Pacific rose more than five points, and three in London where all Americans were strong. Erie was strong both abroad and here, following a semi-official statement which indicated some sort of traffic arrangement with the Canadian Pacific. Rock Island and some of the southwestern roads participated in the rise but this was regarded as a move to cover short liquidation. In the industrial the weak features were American Can, Colorado Fuel, American Linseed, common, American Beet Sugar, and Quicksilver mining. Coppers became prominent later with a new high record for Chino. United States Steel moved within a one point range. Its course denoting fear pressure. The market became dull in the afternoon but in the last hour there was renewal of activity to the accompaniment of marked declines. Call money touched 4 per cent today, but the demand was poor. Bonds were irregular. Total sales, par value, were $2,582,000. Government bonds were unchanged.

STATE PHARMACISTS IN ANNUAL CONVENTION

Officers Elected: Subjects of Interest To Druggists Discussed: Dr. Hart Tells of Early Days.

The second annual meeting of the State Pharmaceutical Association of Arizona was held yesterday in the Masonic temple. A number of pharmacists from various sections of the state were present.

President Harry Brisley, of Prescott, called the meeting to order at 2 P. M.

After business of a routine character was disposed of, the annual election of officers was held.

Harry Brisley was unanimously re-elected president; Fred Fleishman, of Tucson, was elected first vice-president; J. Barnett, of Mesa, second vice-president and Mr. Hunter, of Flagstaff, third vice-president. Thos. E. Thorpe, of Phoenix, was elected secretary and treasurer.

Several subjects of importance to the drug business were discussed. The cordial invitation of the Tucson druggists to hold the next meeting in Tucson in November was accepted.

The applications of 12 new members was acted upon.

This was one of the best attended meetings of the pharmacists ever held in Phoenix. Dr. Hart who has spent many years in Mexico and was one of the pioneer druggists in this state was present and gave a very interesting talk about his experiences in early days.

After two brothers in a little town in the state of New York had engaged in a controversy in which one charged the other with having killed a third brother a year ago, and the accused brother had "confessed," the supposed murdered man put in his appearance suddenly and settled the matter.

There must be something wrong with that bunch of brothers. In the meantime the remains of somebody found in a car of cinders have not been identified. But the "murdered" man insists that he is alive and wants to join the marines. He will have something to tell them, sure.

BROOKLYN, April 11.—New York won the opening game before the greatest crowd ever assembled at a ball park in Brooklyn. So dense were the people packed that the police were called to move them back from the playing lines and a hit that ordinarily would be an easy out went for a double. Those in the stands were not able to see half of the game because of the density of the crowd around the lines. The game was called at the end of the sixth inning on account of darkness.
